Narrative teaching method is a comprehensive teaching method, which contains many specific contents. Liu Jia thinks that it is an perfect combination of approach, method and technique in his "narrative teaching method and its application in college English teaching". The narrative teaching method has received a certain degree of advancement. This new teaching mode not only focuses on the different cognitive levels and abilities of students, but also considers the influence of students' emotional factors on language acquisition, and focuses on cultivating students' application and innovation ability. The narrative teaching method advocates the use of narrative methods in foreign language teaching, and design or guide teachings or parts of the teaching as much as possible using the narrative form. Students will bring themselves in stories, mobilize their own understanding, use imagination, interpret emotions, and liberate the mind, so as to complete the learning process in the process of narrative. 2. The Basis of the Application of Narrative Teaching Method in College English Teaching

2.1 Theoretical Basis of Bruner and Narrative Teaching Method

The anthropologist Bruner believes that human thinking can be divided into narrative and paradigm thinking (scientific thinking). Humans are accustomed to experiencing life through stories, summing up experiences, and making up possible worlds. The narration of "Bruner narrative education thought and its enlightenment" is the "circulation currency" of culture, which is the basic way to understand others. The self is also constructed in narrative. Education must enable students to construct a world of their own in the vast cultural land. Therefore, it is necessary to develop students' narrative thinking ability and use narrative methods in daily knowledge teaching. Bruner's narrative education thought has important enlightenment significance for educational practice and research at all levels.

2.2 Theory of Cognitive Psychology

Through the study of cognitive psychology, we understand that human life is a story-based process, and the authenticity of human events and thoughts can only be expressed and stimulated through stories. This is very important in college English oral teaching. The human event is closely related to the person, that is, the learner itself, which affects the learner's desire. This is precisely the goal of the oral teacher to introduce into the classroom.

2.3 Theory of Cognitive Linguistics

Cognitive linguistics believes that in the process of mastering language, people must first learn the usage of narrative. Narrative discourse is more noticeable than non-narrative discourse, more conducive to cognition and foreign language learning. In college English oral teaching, the topic is closely related to current and future life. Narrative self-expression is an important ability. To express your own life and thoughts in your own language is exactly what students should practice in spoken English.

2.4 Theory of Narrative

Narrative theory believes that people are born to be the storyteller, and the story provides consistency and continuity for people's experiences. Some philosophers have elevated the narrative to the height of human cognition and the basic way of expressing the world.

2.5 Theory of Foreign Language Teaching

There are two main points of foreign language teaching. First is the value of cultural teaching, that is, to cultivate students' cultural awareness. Second, narrative is a fairly interesting process that applies to any level of language and teaching. In the process of learning the language, human beings must be the first to learn the narrative. For example, in oral expression, we have to learn to distinguish between complaints and statements, which is an important ability in cultural acquisition.

5. Conclusion

When advocating a teaching method, we do not deny other ways, just as we emphasize the importance of the quality of the air, and can not stop drinking water. Our goal is to better and faster promote the effectiveness of college English oral teaching. According to Bruner's view and understanding of learning, the essence of learning is that one person connects the same kind of things and organizes them into structures that give them meaning. Narrative teaching is a process of self-relation and self-reconstruction. In short, Bruner believes that the learning of knowledge is to form a certain knowledge structure in the minds of students. This kind of knowledge structure is composed of basic concepts, basic ideas or principles in subject knowledge. The structural form of the knowledge structure is constructed by the coding method of the human coding system and can be expressed by three reproduction modes. The value of a knowledge structure depends on its ability to simplify the data, generate new propositions, and enhance the use of a knowledge. The application of narrative teaching method in college English oral teaching is a way to accept a knowledge structure, simplify data and enhance the use of knowledge. It is beneficial for non-professional college students to learn English.
